- 28 Aug - The Soviet note on the air corridors [REDACTED] is the decisive step for the introduction of steps to change the air traffic to West Berlin which have been the subject of internal discussions for some time. The definitive separation of commercial and military air traffic will occur only after the remaining rights reserved by the USSR have been turned over to the GDR. At that time the GDR can make full use of its sovereign rights. [The GDR will then inform Western commercial air lines that the legal basis for scheduled and charter flights no longer exists. New mutual agreements must be reached within an appropriate time so that traffic need not be stopped. The immediate interest is not in stopping military air traffic but in imposing certain restrictions. If the Western allies do not heed the Soviet note on air traffic, serious intervention in Allied Berlin air traffic will occur in the next few days. The following steps might be taken: A. The Soviet representative in the Berlin Air Safety Center may refuse permission for certain aircraft. B. Certain aircraft may be forced to land in the GDR. C. Certain aircraft may be forced to return through military action by Soviet planes. D. The Soviet representative on BASC may withdraw on temporary or permanent basis even before the signing of a peace treaty. [REDACTED] ✓
